

Operating Systems (1)

This course represents an introductory course of operating systems concepts, which is not linked to any particular or commercial operating system. Basic Concepts of Processes modeling and management, scheduling, memory and disk managements are introduced. Moreover principal concepts, goals, and architectural approaches applicable to the implementation of any desktop operating system will be introduced. Exercises on implementation details of some concepts will be applied during the course activities.